According to a pressing sudden business, Henry is called back to London and asks his best friend Richard, Marquis of Lansdon, to take care of his ladybird, an actress of the London stage. But when Lord Richard arrives, the mistress has traveled on and Lady Victoria is mistaken for the mistress of Henry. The high-spirited Victoria couldn't resist this charade, especially because Lord Richard is the one and only Victoria has fallen in love since childhood and whom their mothers has intended once to marry. Not only because of her false name he doesn't recognize her. Despite her supposed low birth he falls in love but can't bring himself to confess it neither to her nor to himself. So he proposes to another young lady. When the truth comes out he feels scathingly abused, refuses to believe her loving him and doesn't talk to her for several months. Finally, when he fears to have lost her by an accident, they come near again. At the beginning I liked this vivid story quite well. The heroine is rather spirited and lively, the hero likable. There are some other interesting characters and twists in the story. But when it comes to the showdown and the truth is told the hero turns out to be an unsufferable stubborn idiot who is unable to let go his sulkyness. Moreover the heroine whimpers about her loss and only blames herself for the state of their relationship. Eventually a got bored reading on and on about his or her thoughts. I don't think this development of characters and story attractive and let slip away my attention. 0 von 0 Kunden fanden die folgende Rezension hilfreich. well written Regency novel Von Gloria Muller Greatly enjoyed and I look forward to reading more romances by Jacqueline Diamond.
