Von Sandra Wilson : Lady Jane's Ribbons before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Lady Jane's Ribbons:

KundenrezensionenHilfreichste Kundenrezensionen0 von 0 Kunden fanden die folgende Rezension hilfreich. Stellar! 4.5 stars!Von Detra FitchThe year is 1820. Caroline of Brunswick, Queen of England, has returned to claim her rights. Mobs walk the streets nightly in her favor. It has been six months since Lady Jane Derwent's hear was broken due to a humiliating visit from Alicia, Duchess of Brantingham. Alicia had been almost everywhere, on the arm of Lord Lewis

Ardenley, Jane's intended. Alicia's horrid details of her involvement with Lewis was too much. Jane broke off with Lewis and left town to lick her wounds. It was the letters from her friend, Blanch Lyndon, that brought Jane back. Blanch is the fianc of her brother, Henry Derwent, fifth Earl of Felbridge. The problem is that Henry has become obsessed with stagecoach racing. Henry now owns the Fleece Inn and coaches his own stage in races. His bitter rival on the road is Edward Chapman, who is well known for his ruthlessness. Everyone is noticing how Henry keeps forgetting important functions, such as Blanch's birthday party. Blanch's father is now attempting to break the Felbridge betrothal. When Jane spies an ad about a coaching inn being up for sale, she decides that it is the perfect opportunity to teach her brother a much needed lesson. Thus Jane becomes a silent partner with Mr. Wheddle and arrangements are made for her to be in the Midsummer Day race to Brighton. But Lewis does not seem to believe Jane is up for the task she has set for herself. Well perhaps Jane can teach him a lesson or two as well. Author Sandra Wilson has created a wonderful romance with a good bit of adventure while keeping the time setting historically accurate. Even readers, such as I, who care nothing for races will find themselves enjoying this romp. Stellar! Reviewed by Detra Fitch of Huntress Reviews.

KurzbeschreibungLady Jane Derwent faced formidable odds as she set out to win the furious coach race to Brighton. She had to defeat the famous team and the infamous tricks of the ruthless king of the road, Edward Chapman. She had to best the finest entry that her sport-besotted brother Henry could buy with his wealth. And she had to prove to Lord Lewis Ardenley -- who had flagrantly betrayed her with a beauteous new darling -- that he was wrong in rating Jane as too frail either to stay the course or stand off his advances. Lady Jane knew how hard it would be to win, and how easy it would be to lose so much -- especially her heart...
