The characters and setting were realistic and engaging. The conversations between characters were hilarious: it reminded me of Stupid, Crazy Love meets Gilmore Girls. What I loved:- The Characters. I love when characters are well-rounded! Each character in this book has depth and a backstory that begs to be told. None of the people are perfect; everyone has bad points and the story shamelessly lays them out, but in a loving package. It is always great to read books with 3D characters!- The Dialogue. Easily my favorite thing about the book - the verbal interaction between characters. Whether between the married couple, the best friends, the frenemies - it was all energetic, unexpected, and a dash of how I talk to my friends. The drinking game? If you haven't played this one, then you will now!- The Settings. I loved how flawlessly the story moved from urban settings to nature scenes. The descriptions and atmosphere were spot-on and really made it seem like I was watching a movie. In my head.- The direct writing style. I am a fan of the author's use of present tense and his direct writing. It brought me into the story and feelings immediately. What needed work:- Typos. There were a few missing apostrophes and a few awkward sentences (as if changed and then changed back and not everything was remembered), but as the book is self-published I am not willing to subtract stars for this. I have read best-seller darlings with similar mistakes. Also, I felt that it didn't distract from the story. Conclusion: A must-read for those who love laugh-out-loud stories, real characters facing real problems, and good, great, grand love. The emotions, feelings, and situations were realistically portrayed. The storylines intersected perfectly, and made the whole thing hum. Go read it!
